Summer Intern: Labor Economics (727-410)
American Enterprise Institute for Public Policy Research (AEI)

Position Type: Summer Internship

Desired Major(s): All Majors

Location: Washington, District of Columbia (United States)

Description: Resident scholar Michael Strain conducts research on labor market outcomes and the US economy. Some of his current research seeks to understand the employment effects of minimum wages during the Great Recession, the gap in male and female labor market outcomes, and the effect of government employment programs on crime levels. An intern will assist with this research by preparing large government datasets for analysis in Stata. The ideal candidate would have prior experience working with large datasets in Stata, or a similar statistical package, and experience performing economic research, either for a professor or in a prior internship. Only candidates with or working towards a master’s degree in economics or a related field will be considered.
